6. Contextual Paragraph	The following quoted summary can be found at: http://www.historicdenver.org/programs/current-issues/national-western-stock-show/ “While it’s difficult to pinpoint the exact beginnings of the National Western legacy, it’s clear its roots lie with the Stock Yards themselves and Denver’s early and enduring role as a “cow town.” This connection is evidenced by the oldest structure on the site, the center section of the Livestock Exchange Building, completed in 1898. Facing the railroad tracks and originally surrounded by cattle pens this building is at the heart of the Stock Show site and two subsequent additions, one in 1916 and one in 1919, make it a striking property. Perhaps the most quintessential structures on the Stock Show site are not buildings at all, but the cattle pens, or stockyards, which existed even before the National Western Stock Show. The official stockyards, owned by the Denver Union Stock Yard Company, opened in 1886 and still play a role in the complex today.”
7. Connection to Historic Preservation	The National Western Stock Show Complex Arena was recently named a Denver Landmark in April of 2016.
